SOME HEAVY SARCAASM ON "HOW TO PUT ON A PLAY"

When you choose your play, be sure that it is old fashioned. The girls will not be allowed to wear short skirts anyway. In choosing the cast don't take time or trouble to find good actors; they'll be down in their subjects.

At least five teachers should attend rehearsals. The director-in-chief should be easily frustrated. Expect the participants to know their lines, say about at the second practice. If they do not—fly into them; or better yet, get a new actor. Scatter the teachers so that each one will have a different view of the stage. Let them comment freely and be sure that the actors obey each and every command. In this manner, the student will know just what he is to do, when he is to do it, and how it is to be done.

Tell the hero to be "stiff" in the love scene; that's the way they did it in your day. Do not allow him to be passionate and emotional; the audience might believe he was in earnest. Don't make the villain too mean—it might spoil his reputation and create ill feeling towards him among his colleagues.

When the time for giving the play approaches, it is advisable to introduce new stage business just to see how it works. Dress rehearsal should be taken seriously. If parts do not come off as they should, cut 'em out, substitute a little Irish jig, or, better still, drop the last two speeches. The director's conversation should run something like this: "Don't tell me you won't remember your cue; why just after he comes in with the bouquet and arranges it in the vase—no, don't bring in any flowers at all. I'll tell you in the morning—that'll give you plenty of time."

Last of all are the properties. There is no need to select them before dress rehearsal. It is always wise to shift the burden onto a student's shoulders. Nobody has troubles and worries like the producers—poor things.

Roger Cameron Ingram.

Mrs. Benson: What is a simile?

I. Newcomb: I don't know.

Mrs. Benson: Now if you said, "My hours at school are bright as sunshine," what figure of speech would that be?

I. Newcomb: Irony.

(The joke editor must play many roles. In this instance, she turns prophetess.)

FLOSSIE ALLEN

With easel, brushes, canvas, smock,
With paints and palette-knife,
She graces Paris studios
And daubs her way through life.

DEAN HATCH

No greater eloquence than his
In all of Tennessee.
Where Darrow failed, he's fighting now
For Darwin's theory.

EDMUND GENTNER

He says in solemn, reverent tones:
"And now before we sing,
Will the ushers please come forth to take
The evening offering?"

WILLIARD BECKMAN

With pride he views his copious lot:
His acres stretching far,
Pigs, horses, cows; all of the best
A home, a wife, a car.

JENNIE DOTSON

Neat, uniformed, and competent,
She slashes with her knife,
Or fights the all-destroying germ
To save a human life.

MARION ELLIOT

She wonders if heredity
Or punishment for sins
Has brought this fate upon her head:
This second set of twins.

BEATRICE SHIPMAN

Our Betty's teaching history,
"Home ec" and physics, too;
Geometry, biology,
And French, or what have you.

FAMOUS QUOTATIONS

Ruth Snyder: The third and fourth squads will report tonight.
Miss Marchant: One, two, three, four, one, two, three, four.
Karl Jack: Good old———!
Irwin Wakefield: Steeck around!
Mr. Reese: For tomorrow we'll take the next two theorems.
"Bud" Woodworth: Give me four scoops of chocolate.
Verna Kettleman: Dear, dear, dear!

HOW TO BE A TYPICAL SENIOR

Why look with envy on the pompous senior when you yourself can be one! Wear a gaudy sweater, a bored look, and a general appearance of superiority. Carry a fountain pen and a pack of gum. A book or two tucked under the arm is advisable to avoid suspicion. A few brains may be convenient in case an alibi is needed. Talk incessantly, exercising a vocabulary highly seasoned with slang, and, by all means, never fail to call a teacher by her first name. Never lift your feet from the floor while walking. Sleep seven periods a day. Failure to do so may result in purple rings about the eyes such as appear on a student's countenance just before a test.

◆ ◆ ◆

Miss Haun: "One man is knocked down by an automobile every ten minutes in Chicago."

Paul Boese: "Wow! I should think it would wear him out."

◆ ◆ ◆

Miss Rosenberry: "What man was noted for his original ideas?"

Flossie Allen: "Adam."

◆ ◆ ◆

Mr. Ballou: But Winfield, think of the future!

Windy: I can't. It's Eula's birthday and I must think of the present.

◆ ◆ ◆

Mrs. Erich: Did you empty the pan under the ice box?

Minnie S. Yes, and I put fresh water in it.

◆ ◆ ◆

Oliver P: Say, look at the complexion that girl's got.

Irwin W.: Yeah, she gets it from her father.

Oliver: Howcome? Her father is sallow.

Irwin: Sure, but he owns a drug store.

◆ ◆ ◆

Stranger: What's that funny thing on your arm?

H. Neumann: Oh, that's only my brother.

◆ ◆ ◆

Melissa W.; Miss Graham, how do you decline "cake" in Latin?

Miss Graham: The same as you do in English. You simply say, "No, thank you."

◆ ◆ ◆

Miss Harvey: Who started the saying, "It's an ill wind that blows nobody good?"

Karl Jack: The Listerine Company.

◆ ◆ ◆

Hubby: I spent the winter in Germany—I sure liked Danzig.

Evelyn: Shall we step out on the floor then, or is your cold too bad?

◆ ◆ ◆

He: What kind of tooth paste do you use?

Him: None, my teeth aren't loose.

R. Stevens: Karl Jack is a pretty bright kid, isn't he?

Bessie Thomas: Naw! He's so dumb that if you asked him for a pup tent he'd try to sell you a dog house.
