Foreword

FEARLESS, brave, struggling heroes, spanning the air trails—over oceans, across burning deserts, high above mountain ranges, through rain and snow—conquering the forces of nature; such are the men who have figured in man's successful "Conquest of the Air." Ever since the Wright Brothers sailed their first motor-driven plane at Kitty-Hawk, man has struggled to conquer the opposition he has faced.

This spirit sweeping over the nation today has ushered in an era of progress never to be forgotten in the history of the world. Air mail and transport lines piloted through snow and sleet, through rain or shine, by day and night travel the air paths as man intrepidly pushes back all obstacles in his advance.

Symbolic of this spirit of advancement against opposition, the staff has this year chosen "The Conquest of the Air" as the theme for the 1929 Tokay.

With this as the motif, they have endeavored to give in this volume an interesting record of the activities of Lodi Union High School for the year 1928-'29.

In Memoriam

Mrs. Lottie Faber Towler

Teacher of English

Lois Allen

Class of 1930

*"Another sun shines there! Another moon.
Another light, not dusk, nor dawn, nor noon.
And they who once beholding come no more
They have attained My peace-life's utmost boon."*

The Song Celestial

The Dawn Patrol

The airdrome looks awesome in its blanket of early dawn.
The shadows of hangars and buildings look like gruesome monsters of old.
The mumbling roar of motors mixed with an occasional scream of a shell!
And the great winged birds are as silent as their masters.
The intervals of semi-silence are broken by the harsh muttering of mechanics.
A cold motor coughs into life, then breaks into a mighty song of triumph!
A commander's terse instructions, a curse, a jest, a prayer, in rapid succession,
A mighty roar of motors, a cloud of dust, they are off!
The Dawn Patrol goes to salute the rising sun.
Flaming youth takes its fling at death among the roar of mighty motors, and the screams of falling planes.
A triumphant shout, or bitter curse as a pal goes down in flames!
Revenge, an insane laugh, a world seen through bloodshot eyes!
