PROLOGUE

As youth's dreams are but a promise
To be fulfilled still later on,
As a fountain starts each streamlet
On its course with endless song,
As the dawn and light of morning
Lifts the veil of darkened gloom,
So this book is but a symbol—
Just a bud — our lives the bloom.

GRADUATION MESSAGE

MEMBERS of the Class of 1923, I congratulate you upon the completion of your four-year high school course. I trust, however, that you carry with you more than the memory of your four happiest years, more than a certain fund of knowledge, more than a diploma of graduation. The habits of mind and conduct you have been forming are far more important than the information you have accumulated. I shall not feel fully satisfied, therefore, unless you have learned to think clearly, speak truthfully, and act nobly; unless you have acquired something of the difficult art of self-mastery; unless you have developed a capacity for growth, physically, mentally and spiritually; unless you have learned the joy of service. If you have mastered these truths, your life will be increasingly rich, fine, and free, and all those around you will be the happier because of the fact that you are graduates of the Stockton High School.
