

JUNE CLASS

FOUR YEARS AGO, a flock of little "scrubs" entered the folds of Stockton High School. Ah! How well the now mighty seniors remember those first hectic days of adjustment. A guilty blush would spread on their faces when they jumped up at the forty minute bell in study, only to cower down under the jeering call of "Scrubs!" However, these freshmen, made of strong stock, survived the heckling and asked about the laws of the school from the deans. After hearing the rules of the game, out brave freshmen settled down to the hard grind. Came the day of the N. R. A. parade. Naturally, the freshies were stuck at the end of the line, but in the final reckoning they showed up the mighty seniors. Ending their first successful year, the freshmen donated several valuable players to the football team. At the close of that first year they heaved a sigh or relief upon at least having lost the stigma of "scrub".

Back at school again after a summer of sunburn, our class became the haughty sophomores. Remembering their treatment as freshmen, they worked off their long stored-up resentment by giving the incoming freshies a run for their money. Disdainful of the lowly frosh, the sophomores felt pride in themselves. They had good reason to be proud. Had not nineteen of their members made the Honor Scholarship Society? Were not some of the class very able officers of the student body? Several sophomores tried out in the Shakespearean contest and won honor for their class. The next exciting event was the Sports Carnival. The faculty bicycle race proved to be hilarious. Imagine the sophomore's delight at seeing their dignified teacher speeding around the track, dignity thrown to the winds. And so closed the second year with our class satisfied, and proud of themselves.

Ding! Ding! sounded the school bell and our class came back a very dignified group of upperclassmen. They were still represented on the Honor Scholarship, and were still active in school politics. With a look of pity they sympathized with the little greenhorns who were taking the usual beating from the sophomores, who in turn had had their dose from the now superior juniors. Feeling that they wanted to be represented even more in school athletics, the juniors contributed a few more players for the football and basketball teams. After the athletic season, the school turned its attention to a new idea which emerged in the form of the Masc-Fem Review. The juniors felt that they ought to participate, so they sent their ablest representatives, who again upheld the class's high standard of achievement. When the final day came, the juniors, knowing that they had worked hard and had won, put aside their books.

Now enter the seniors on their last lap. They chose Wayne Bird to lead them as 12B President. A new department called Play Production was made up mostly of low seniors who had a yen for the theatre. Seniors, beginning to think of music, sent some of their members to Mr. Smith. Many public speakers sprang up from the 12B class; in fact the Armistice Day program consisted mostly of low seniors. As the fall term drew to an end, the student body election took place. For the last half year the seniors, now high and mighty, elected for their class the following officers: Bill Biddick, president; Wayne Bird, vice-president; Tom Eslinger, secretary-treasurer; Rolla Garretson was elected president of the Student Body; Rowena Satterburg, first vice-president; Nicolina Fickovich, president of Girls' League. As anyone can see, this class has been active throughout its high school career, and as the three hundred seventy-seven students close their books for the last time in dear old Stockton High, they know that they have done their work well.

JUNE SENIOR PLAY

IN SHARP CONTRAST to the sophisticated comedy of the February class play, the June class presented their production, "The Charm School" in the High School auditorium May 28. Austin Bevans, played by Carroll Austin, is left a girls' school by an aunt. He arrives at the school to find antiquated methods and books being used. Of course, all the girls immediately fall in love with him, and he decides to re-make the school on modern lines. Scenes in the classrooms and the girls' dorm are all humorously depicted. The girls have meetings which call forth giggles from the audience when they try to conform to parliamentary law in making their motions and generally conducting business. The girls are about ready to leave school and go home when the young owner and his friends appear. They immediately change their minds for some silly reason or other, and decide to stay at the school.

Most of the cast had had experience in some type of dramatics before, so their parts were very well interpreted. Those in the cast were Miriam Corren, Maxine Daoust, Halcyon Brown, Carroll Austin, Bill Biddick, Muriel Brown, Gail Scheere, Maude Metcalf, Jack Lacey, Joe Thornton, Bill Hunefeld, Gordon Jacobs, Helen Baxley, Mary Glick, Ella Mae Cannon, and Virginia Grey. David Ritchie, teacher of drama, directed the play. The orchestra, directed by Miss Virginia Short, rendered three selections during the production.
