'MR. FOOTBALL'

This is a picture Dick O'Day and Stockton College will always remember. It must be mentioned that the popular Dick O'Day was not mentioned as an outstanding player because he suffered a broken arm and was out most of the season.

Amos Alonzo Stagg

Stockton College proudly claims Mr. Amos Alonzo Stagg as Colt-Mustang football coach. Mr. Stagg is the most famous name in Football. He is known nationally not only in gridiron circles but to the general public as well. His name and football will always go together.

Mr. Stagg attended Yale University and played football two years at that institution--- 1888-1889. One year he played Right-End and the other at Left-End. Immediately after he graduated from college he served as football coach for Springfield College (1890-1891). He coached at the University of Chicago for 41 years. At Chicago he was Professor of Physical Education and Athletics as well as football coach. Because of a compulsory retirement plan at Chicago he moved to C.O.P. at seventy years of age in 1933. He was head coach at Pacific for 14 years. He served six seasons at Susquehanna University where he coached offense and planned strategy while his son coached the defense and line. At present he is advisory coach at Stockton College.

Mr. Stagg was named on Walter Camp's All-American team in 1889. This was the first All-American team in the history of football. While at C.O.P. he was Professor of Physical Education. In 1947 Mr. Stagg was named Football Coach Emeritus at the College of the Pacific.

Amos Alonzo Stagg, well known as "The grand old man of football," is a loved and respected figure in the Football world. Stockton College proudly hails him as "MR. FOOTBALL," not only for 1954, but for all time.

Neither rain, nor mud, nor wind can stop the stampeding "Tangs"

Scheduled for ten games in 1953, the Mustangs carried away six wins and four losses. Final statistics showed the Mustangs far ahead of the opposition.

Leading ground-gainer was Gene Campbell with 843 yards in 96 carries. Following in yardage gained was Jim Holt with 770 yards in 92 carries. Gene Campbell, J. B. Girard, Phil Huff and Darrel Haynes were named as the outstanding players of the year. Huff, Haynes, and Girard were named first string All-Conference. Gene Campbell and LeRoy Smith were named All-Conference in the second string.
